ABA Welcome

On behalf of Australia's biggest basketball competition, the Australian Basketball Association (ABA), I would like to welcome you to the 2007 season.

With over 120 teams participating across five leagues and six states, the ABA competition is the vital link between grass roots basketball in Australia and the elite NBL and WNBL leagues.

The League provides a high standard of competition for local basketballers from across the country as well as an intense environment for our professionals to utilise in their off seasons.

2007 welcomes in an exciting era for the ABA, with the national finals to be held over two weekends for the first ever time and the recent decision that the ABA has been integrated into the operations of Basketball Australia (BA).

The ABA competition will continue to be conducted in accordance with the ABA competition rules, with BA taking responsibility for the finals series.

2007 will again see some of Australia's well-known basketball stars taking the court for their local teams, along with the new breed of young up and coming players who will be tomorrow's stars.

Central to the success of the ABA is the dedication of the players, staff and volunteers that put in hours of work, your continued support and work is forever appreciated.

The 2006 season was another fantastic success with the culmination resulting in an outstanding National Final Series in Newcastle, New South Wales.

The top eight men's and women's teams from around the country, including the champions of the five ABA leagues, met at the Newcastle Basketball Stadium with the Ballarat Lady Miners winning back-to-back Women's National Championships and the Geelong Supercats taking the Men's Championship.

I would like to thank the media and sponsors around the country for their continued support of our league.

Finally, I would like to take this opportunity to wish all the teams the best of luck for the season.

I look forward to seeing everyone at the National finals in August.

ABA History of the ABA

The Australian Basketball Association's (ABA) roots can be traced back as far as 1965, when just eight clubs competed in the South Eastern Conference (SEC). The SEC continued until 1971 when the Australian Club Championships gained pre-eminence.

In 1981, the SEC was reborn as the South Eastern Basketball League (SEBL) when the Australian Club Championships ceased to operate due to the rise of Australia's first truly national competition, the now professional National Basketball League.

The SEBL was divided into a South and East Conference format in 1986; the same year Queensland's State Basketball League was founded.

In 1994 the bodies merged to create the current North, South and East Conference concept of the National Continental Basketball Association.

1998 saw further expansion with the inclusion of a Central Conference from South Australia conducting competitions for both men and women. In that same year, the switch of NBL and WNBL seasons to Summer enabled the ABA to offer professional players a showcase for their skills during the winter months.

2000 saw the addition of Big V from Victoria and in 2001 the Waratah Conference from New South Wales was included for the first time.

Since 2002, the champions of each of the five leagues and a number of wildcard entries competed at the inaugural Australian Basketball Club Champions Finals. This addition of a truly national ABA final series marked the dawn of a new era of national basketball competition in Australia.

Since 1965 the ABA has played an integral part in the development of Australian basketball with hundreds of past and present WNBL and NBL players honing their skills against world-class opposition. Many NBL and WNBL clubs have also benefited from their involvement in ABA competition, including the Melbourne Tigers who competed in the SEBL before joining the NBL.

Today the ABA incorporates five leagues – the SEABL, Big V, QABL, Central and Waratah leagues. With the support of Basketball Australia, the competition continues to build upon the successful structure created by the well-respected Continental Basketball Association. The end result is a culmination of over 30 years of evolution, during which time the ABA has mushroomed from eight teams in the South East of Australia to a competition that involves 122 men's and women's teams based in six states and territories.

The ABA is representative of the huge number of junior-based associations across the country and is the endorsed national development league of the sport's peak body, Basketball Australia.
